Two issues are of great concern – the transportation through White Pine County's terrain, rugged w/ many summits two lane rural highways, with very extreme weather. There are very limited resources for emergency response and most response agencies rely entirely on volunteers. And, the fact White Pine County is down wind from the test site. The unsurety of the effects and stability of storing the spent waste for such a long period of time in such a concentrated amount is chillingly unreal. Anyone who deals with HAZMAT realizes that if you keep the materials disbursed and below threshold levels they are easy to deal with and not significant risks. This concentration in an area of known volcanic activity is a disaster waiting to happen.
